'Low value' and 'inappropriate' medical care - what is the difference and how widespread is it?'

Guest Speakers: Dr Tim Badgery-Parker & Prof Julie Quinlivan

6.15pm Scientific Meeting, 7.30pm Dinner

Wednesday 18th September 2019

Dr Tim Badgery-Parker, Menzies Centre for Health Policy, University of Sydney

Tim Badgery-Parker is a Research Fellow in the Menzies Centre for Health Policy at the University of Sydney. He recently completed his PhD on measuring low-value care, working with the NSW Ministry of Health and the Capital Markets CRC.

Taking recommendations from Choosing Wisely and similar sources, Tim developed indicators of low-value care based on hospital admissions data and used them to examine the prevalence and trends in use of low-value procedures in NSW public hospitals. He is currently interested in exploring the consequences of low-value care for both patients and the health system.

Before starting his PhD, Tim completed a Master of Biostatistics through the NSW Health Biostatistical Officer Training Program, and then worked as a Biostatistics Research Officer in the Surgical Outcomes Research Centre (SOuRCe) at Royal Prince Alfred Hospital, and the Cancer Epidemiology and Services Research group (CESR) in the Sydney School of Public Health.

Professor Julie Quinlivan, Director of Professional Services Review

Professor Julie Quinlivan is Director of the Professional Services Review, Member of the Administrative Appeals Tribunal of Australia, Editor in Chief of the Journal of Psychosocial Obstetrics and Gynaecology and on the Editorial Board of the Australian and New Zealand Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology and Frontiers in Diabetes. She has published 260 books, book chapters, original research articles and conference proceedings. She is a former Pro Vice Chancellor and Executive Dean of Medicine, Dean of Medicine and Dean of Health. She has been Chair of the WA Clinical Senate and a Non-Executive Director of several Area Health Service and TAFE Boards.
