

Sharron Flahive

Sport & Exercise Physician | Director The Stadium Clinic | Chief Medical Officer - National Rugby League ~ Devoted to health, well-being & injury prevention

Sharron is currently the Team Doctor for the Wallabies Australian Rugby Union Team, Club Doctor for the Sydney Swans Football Club, Chief Medical Officer for Equestrian Australia and the Chief Medical Officer of the National Rugby League.

She has just completed my tenure as the Chief Medical Officer for the Wallaroos Women's Rugby Union Team, which began in 2019. Prior to this position, she was the first female Sport and Exercise Physician to be appointed to a professional rugby union team when she started as the Waratahs Chief Medical Officer in 1999, retaining the role until the end of season 2019, 20years! NSWRU honoured her role as their longest serving member of staff with a life membership in 2020.

Outside of her team appointments and private practice, she is devoted to education, teaching and professional development within the Sport and Exercise Medicine field. In 2021, she became a concussion and medical consultant on the NRL (National Rugby League) Medical Advisory Panel, in 2019 became an Independent Director on the Board for IRP (International Rugby Players Association) and in 2020 accepted the position as Chair Of Training for ACSEP (Australasian College of Sport and Exercise Physicians). As of 2022, she is the Chief Medical Officer of the NRL (National Rugby League.)

Sharron is also a Director and Sport & Exercise Physician at The Stadium Sports Medicine Clinic, specialising in being able to assist all patients to return to fitness and to resume normal participation in their work and life without pain and dysfunction.
